IU SCHOOL OF LIBERAL ARTS
INDIANA UNIVERSITY-PURDUE UNIVERSITY INDIANAPOLIS
Sam Masarachia lived to see the first three Masarachia Scholars into their senior years of study. By the fall semester of 2004, the scholarship program he had established five years earlier was supporting twelve students, full time, forming a complete cohort of Sam Masarachia Scholars. He took enormous satisfaction in knowing that the program is secure–forever–because of the endowment he had gifted in the early years of the Campaign for Liberal Arts.

“The great use of life is to spend it on something that will outlast it.”

Sam Masarachia

1906–2004

Dedicated to the memory of our friend, Sam Masarachia
Dear Friend,

Each day we take lessons in generosity from people like you. The stories are too numerous to detail in a short publication like this. Indeed, yours is the story we mean to tell, if somewhat awkwardly, in these pages. Every gift came because of a caring heart and a determination to ease the way for others—usually strangers.

The dynamic of giving is a dynamic of good feeling, trust and promise. You make your gift because you feel the cause is good. You trust the school to use your gift wisely, making a difference in someone’s life, improving the educational experience, advancing knowledge and helping shape the future of our global community. In accepting your generosity, we promise to do just that.

Over 1,250 generous people, including you, are honored in this report. Collectively, you gave $988,041 to Liberal Arts in 2004. We thank you for your vision and trust. You are making profound changes in the future, and we are truly grateful to you.

With sincere thanks,

Robert W. White
Dean, IU School of Liberal Arts at IUPUI

2004: A YEAR OF HISTORIC PROPORTIONS

$35,749,606

The Campaign for IUPUI and for the IU School of Liberal Arts concluded on June 30, 2004, and campaign co-chairs Barbara and Karl Zimmer and David Frick were on hand to unveil our totals. Nearly $10 million in private support raised during the seven year campaign was totaled with non-governmental research grants to reach the heady figure of $35,749,606.

From day one of the campaign, lives were being changed by the philanthropy of alumni, staff, faculty and members of our community. Sometimes the change was highly individualized, like the student who received an emergency loan to cover books until financial aid kicked in (The Dan B. Wolf Emergency Loan Fund is supported by staff and faculty to assist students in unexpected circumstances). Sometimes it was directed to a group of prospective students, like the grant from the Hoover Family Foundation that supported a common reading experience for the junior class at Arsenal Tech High School and brought a number of them to campus for a presentation by Leigh Fought, associate editor of the Frederick Douglass Papers project.

Always, it made a difference.

“The best use of a life is to spend it on something that will outlast it.”

Philanthropy changes things. Each act of philanthropy, each gift to support a department or program or student, outlasts even the life of the gift—touching the future in ways that are sometimes difficult to measure. The next few pages highlight a few of the activities supported through private philanthropy, but they are illustrative of the impact each gift has on our community. The Liberal Arts—the humanities and social sciences—provide the content and the context of a good life. Your generosity makes sure that happens.
Five hundred students from Arsenal Tech High School shared a common reading experience as they studied The Narrative Life of Frederick Douglass through the generosity of the Hoover Family Foundation and Yale University Press. A campus collaboration allowed a select group of students to visit IUPUI for a special presentation by the editors of the Frederick Douglass Papers, a documentary editing project in the School of Liberal Arts, who are compiling and annotating all of Douglass' written work in two series of volumes.
The School hosted and participated in numerous events for students, alumni, donors, and the community including Explore IUPUI, the graduating seniors reception, and IUPUI Jaguars men's and women's basketball games.

Made possible by donor support, the Sixth L. Keith Bulen Symposium on American Politics, 2004: What Happened and Where Are We Headed?, included discussions on the campaign trail, voters, political advertising, and political strategy.
The 15th Annual Joseph T. Taylor Symposium on The Arts in the City: The Power of Culture kicked off with a performance by the Legacy Theater of the Indiana State Museum, directed by Shari Lynn Himes (BA 1987, Communication/Theatre). The Symposium is made possible with a grant from The Lilly Endowment Inc. as well as individual gifts from friends, colleagues and family members of Dr. Joseph Taylor and support from the campus and business communities. At the Celebration of Scholarship in April, 2004, Liberal Arts students were recognized with a variety of School scholarships and awards. All were made possible by the generosity and support of alumni, friends, faculty, and staff. For the students, the scholarships and awards are recognition of academic excellence, much needed financial assistance, and, in many cases, provide special opportunities for students to study abroad, work closely with faculty members, and simply focus more on their studies.

The National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) supported enhancements to the Peirce Goedetic marker on the IUPUI campus, dedicated during the 2004 Indiana Geography Bee. A symposium on Charles S. Peirce was held in conjunction with the dedication. The marker, the new bench, and plaque stand near the Peirce Edition Project's new offices in the Education-Social Work building.
