Information for Double Majors or Potential Double Majors in English and International Studies

GENERAL INFORMATION:

Because of its interdisciplinary nature, the International Studies major includes coursework from a variety of academic disciplines within the School of Liberal Arts such as Anthropology, Economics, Geography, History, Political Science and World Languages and Cultures. It also includes courses that come from other schools such as the Herron School of Art and Design and the Kelley School of Business.

International Studies students who choose to double major may “double count” up to 9 credits from their other major toward their International Studies major. Such credits must fit within the other parameters of the International Studies major. Depending on the major and on the specific coursework taken, it may not always be possible to find 9 credits that will “double count” toward the International Studies major. Courses that are cross-listed and potentially fulfill more than one requirement in the International Studies major can only be counted in one area.

INFORMATION FOR ENGLISH/INTL. STUDIES DOUBLE MAJORS:

ENG C390 These are variable topics courses. Depending on the specific topic covered, C390 may count toward various area and/or thematic concentrations within the International Studies major. Please consult the list of courses that fulfill the various area and thematic concentration requirements or get in touch with the International Studies program director with questions about a specific C390 course.

ENG L245 counts toward the Latin America & Caribbean area concentration.

ENG L301 counts toward the European area concentration.

ENG L302 counts toward the European area concentration.

ENG L348 counts toward the European area concentration.

ENG L365 counts toward the European area concentration.

ENG L366 counts toward the European area concentration.

ENG L373 counts toward the Development thematic concentration.

ENG L378 These are variable topics courses. Depending on the specific topic covered, L378 may count toward various area and/or thematic concentrations within the International Studies major. Please consult the list of courses that fulfill the various area and thematic concentration requirements or get in touch with the International Studies program director with questions about a specific L378 course.

ENG L382

These are variable topics courses. Depending on the specific topic covered, L382 may count toward various area and/or thematic concentrations within the International Studies major. Please consult the list of courses that fulfill the various area and thematic concentration requirements or get in touch with the International Studies program director with questions about a specific L382 course.

ENG L406

These are variable topics courses. Depending on the specific topic covered, L406 may count toward various area and/or thematic concentrations within the International Studies major. Please consult the list of courses that fulfill the various area and thematic concentration requirements or get in touch with the International Studies program director with questions about a specific L406 course.

ENG L411

These are variable topics courses. Currently, the course topic “South African Literature and Society” (also taught as INTG I300) fulfills the Africa area concentration. Please get in touch with the InternationalStudies program director with questions about a specific L411 course.

ENG L431

These are variable topics courses. Currently, the course topic “Philanthropy and Literature” fulfills the Global Civil Society thematic concentration. Please get in touch with the InternationalStudies program director with questions about a specific L431 course.

ENG W366

counts toward the Global and Cross-Cultural Interactions thematic concentration.

ENG Z301

counts toward the European area concentration.

Any English course that includes an overseas travel component can fulfill the International Experience requirement.

Questions or additional information: Contact the Program Admin Nicole Collins at ndcollin@iupui.edu or 317-274-7611 or the Program Director Dr. Michael Snodgrass at misnodgr@iupui.edu.